For New Englanders, February can be the most challenging and loneliest month of winter. As we near the end of this long cold, snowy season and wade more fully into 2018, it’s helpful to remember that things change, evolve, get better - all seasons come round again if you wait it out.

Of all the things we offer at Good Life, helping people is what it all comes down to for us. That’s why we do what we do. So whatever your challenges are, whatever the season, we can help you cope, transform, hope, and change. That’s the support we offer our clients and community.

The best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others.

Q: How does working with a nutritional therapist differ from working with a nutritionist?
A: Nutritional therapy recognizes the biological individuality of each person. Every individual has different nutritional needs that cannot be met with a “one size fits all” approach. Nutritional therapy focuses on utilizing key indicators to correct imbalances or deficiencies at the root of an individual’s symptoms. Deficiencies and imbalances are discovered or confirmed through a hands-on non-invasive technique which is unique to nutritional therapy.

Q: What is your approach to the nutritional assessment?
A: I use a foundational approach that strives to promote optimal wellness through smart food choice and, when and if necessary, natural food supplements. I work with you to identify and correct the imbalances and / or deficiencies that may be at the root of nagging symptoms or health issues that you are experiencing. This is accomplished through a combination of the inputs I collect from you as well as the data I gather first-hand from the functional evaluation that I perform.

Q: What are the most common issues you help your clients to address?
A: Fatigue and lack of energy; digestive issues such as frequent discomfort from gas, bloating, acid reflux, constipation or diarrhea; sleeplessness; alleviating menopausal symptoms; and of course, losing those few extra pounds.

Gardening can sometimes be quite an undertaking. Myself, I like flowers and I love to garden. My garden is my sanctuary. I spend the winter season thinking about my spring garden, scanning brochures for new ways to improve it’s charm as I eagerly await spring. As soon as spring arrives, I’m weeding and clearing making room for the new plants that are beginning to bud. I till the soil and plant new plants, I water and fertilize. By actively cultivating and clearing all that is not needed in this space, I’m assured that my garden will remain healthy and productive season after season and year after year.

When I step back to assess my efforts, a feeling of joy and contentment fills me. I am happy proud and pleased with my efforts. I can imagine how beautiful my garden will look when in bloom. I smell the many wonderful fragrances and hear the soft buzzing of the bees as they bounce from flower to flower. Satisfaction sets in with my knowing that all this effort will produce a beautiful masterpiece.

This is a ritual that I am committed to. This nurturing process involves a conscious effort, one that I enjoy and take great pride in. Taking the time to weed, prune, fertilize and water assures my garden remains healthy, strong and thriving year after year.

How this relates to Hypnosis? Hypnosis focuses on our subconscious mind. The subconscious mind is like a garden of what’s been planted throughout our lifetime. What’s nourished grows and flourishes. We all have things that have been planted and not weeded or nurtured taking up space in our subconscious mind. These can be things such as stress, anxiety and phobias. They stay with us season after season and year after year, taking over the garden of our subconscious mind. We have to weed out those things that don’t provide us with what we need or desire. With Hypnosis we can weed out what’s not working in our lives, such as limiting beliefs, negative thought patterns and unhealthy habits and fill our subconscious mind with all that we desire. This allows us to cultivate happiness, success and a sense of well being that will remain with us season after season and year after year.

As with the seasons, hypnosis provides us with the opportunity to change and to cultivate that which brings us joy, happiness and love.
